Traditional craftsmanship combines with modern technology to create cabinetry that has a timeless appeal

Above: This kitchen is an example of the Prizma EuroStyle product from Mouser Custom Cabinetry. The door style is Geneva in Select Cherry wood with an Espresso finish. Upper cabinets are teamed with crown moulding to impart a modern classic feel. The company manufactures cabinets up to, and over, 108in tall.

While there is no denying the widespread benefits of Henry Ford's assembly-line approach to manufacturing, the appeal of hand-crafted furniture of bygone eras is still as strong today as it was at the turn of the last century.

The attention to detail and sense of individuality intrinsic to a custom piece adds a level of worth over and above a simple monetary value, says

Steve Pfister, director of sales and marketing for Mouser Custom Cabinetry.

"The name Mouser Custom Cabinetry has, over the past 50 years, become synonymous with quality craftsmanship and the value derived from it. Mouser represents a sound investment in furniture for the kitchen – one which offers durability and aesthetics, and a style that will not date."

With a range of products under the brands CornerStone Overlay, StoneHearth Inset, Prizma EuroStyle and Centra Cabinetry, Mouser offers customers an enormous variety of cabinet styles, finishes and materials from which to choose.

“As well as an extensive range of door styles, Mouser is able to construct custom cabinetry to match existing door styles in a client’s home. This is another example of the pride Mouser takes in creating top-of-the-line custom cabinets of exacting quality.”

The secret to the firm’s longevity is consistency, says Pfister. “All employees are responsible for maintaining the caliber of the product – from the time the materials arrive at our plant, through the manufacturing process, to final inspection before delivery.

This ensures quality goes into each and every product, before the name goes on it.”
